John Rei
VP of Technology and Strategic Supply

John Rei

Vice President Technology and
Strategic Supply

(808) 457-5345

jrei@sopogy.com

John Rei is the Vice President of Technology and Strategic Supply. In this capacity he leads the engineering and research & development activities for Sopogy, including new product development and product revisions. He is also responsible for identifying enabling technologies and for negotiating strategic supply agreements with key vendors. Mr. Rei has also provided expertise to Sopogy's activities in project management, procurement, manufacturing, utility negotiations, business development, and legislative activities.

Mr. Rei brings strong operational leadership to the Sopogy team. In his 5 years as a management consultant with Booz Allen Hamilton, he provided strategic market analysis and business development expertise focused on Hawaii and the Asia Pacific region, most recently in renewable energy initiatives with State and Federal government agencies. Previously, he served as a Captain in the U.S. Army Special Forces.

Mr. Rei graduated in the top 10% of his class with a B.S. in Aerospace Engineering from the United States Military Academy at West Point, and received his M.B.A. from Harvard Business School where his studies focused on operations strategy and general management.

Sopogy is a leader in MicroCSP technologies that bring the economics of proven large scale Concentrating Solar Power Systems (CSP) to the distributed generation markets. MicroCSP technologies are used to create process heat, solar air conditioning or electrical power.
